

HOW TO DRAW SUPERHEROES

BY CHUCK KLEIN

DRA
MUSC

DRA
MUSC

THEN
MUSC

THEN
MUSC

the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are employed in the public sector has increased by 1.5 million, from 2.5 million in 1980 to 4 million in 1995. The public sector has also become an important employer of women, with 50% of public sector employees being women in 1995.

There are a number of reasons why the public sector has become an important employer of women. One reason is that the public sector has a high proportion of female employees in the lower pay grades, which are often the most attractive to women. Another reason is that the public sector has a high proportion of female employees in the higher pay grades, which are often the most attractive to men. A third reason is that the public sector has a high proportion of female employees in the non-unionised sector, which is often the most attractive to women.

The public sector has also become an important employer of women because of the increasing number of women who are in the workforce. In 1995, 60% of the UK workforce was female, up from 50% in 1980. This increase in the number of women in the workforce has led to a corresponding increase in the number of women in the public sector.

The public sector has also become an important employer of women because of the increasing number of women who are in the workforce. In 1995, 60% of the UK workforce was female, up from 50% in 1980. This increase in the number of women in the workforce has led to a corresponding increase in the number of women in the public sector.

The public sector has also become an important employer of women because of the increasing number of women who are in the workforce. In 1995, 60% of the UK workforce was female, up from 50% in 1980. This increase in the number of women in the workforce has led to a corresponding increase in the number of women in the public sector.

The public sector has also become an important employer of women because of the increasing number of women who are in the workforce. In 1995, 60% of the UK workforce was female, up from 50% in 1980. This increase in the number of women in the workforce has led to a corresponding increase in the number of women in the public sector.

The public sector has also become an important employer of women because of the increasing number of women who are in the workforce. In 1995, 60% of the UK workforce was female, up from 50% in 1980. This increase in the number of women in the workforce has led to a corresponding increase in the number of women in the public sector.

The public sector has also become an important employer of women because of the increasing number of women who are in the workforce. In 1995, 60% of the UK workforce was female, up from 50% in 1980. This increase in the number of women in the workforce has led to a corresponding increase in the number of women in the public sector.

The public sector has also become an important employer of women because of the increasing number of women who are in the workforce. In 1995, 60% of the UK workforce was female, up from 50% in 1980. This increase in the number of women in the workforce has led to a corresponding increase in the number of women in the public sector.